"Kingsolver recounts a year spent eating home-grown food and, if not that, local. Accomplished gardeners, the Kingsolver clan grow a large garden in southern Appalachia...they make pickles, chutney and mozzarella; they jar tomatoes, braid garlic and stuff turkey sausage... come winter, they feast on root crops and canned goods....Kingsolver takes [this] genre to a new literary level; a well-paced narrative and the apparent ease of the beautiful prose makes the pages fly."
